Country stampede camping pass

When: June 23-25 Where: Tuttle Creek Lake State Park Cost: $79 to $140 The biggest music festival in Kansas, the Kicker Country Stampede in Manhattan, is a three-day camping from June 23-25, with a lineup that features today's biggest country artists such as Sam Hunt, Tim McGraw, Dierks Bentley and Jake Owen. The hosting company, Kicker, offers a three-day Spring the Line ticket, a one-day general admission ticket, a three-day general admissions ticket and VIP passes. If participants want to camp, they'll have to buy at least a three-day general admission ticket along with a $150 camping pass. There are also other camping passes such as four-day reserved camping, family camping and preferred or premier camping, which include first choice at your campsite and other luxuries such as a power supply and workwater. Participants can also purchase several add-ons such as food and drink tickets, early bird camping or party pit to an artist, giving you access to standing room right in front of the stages. Festival-goers can also buy early bird camping for as low as $10. There are three stages at the festival: the main ones, home to the biggest names there, and the other two phases, boast a lineup with a large amount of smaller country artists for those who want to find new music while at the festival. In addition, one lucky contestant has the chance to create and subscribe to a song in competition to play on the main stage during the festival. As of now, there are five participants going through a number of rounds of public voting. Although the pricing may seem extremely high, there's a payment plan that will enable participants to pay for all expenses over the course of five months. Also consider the fact that participants — probably in a group and not alone — are provided with campsites, food and drink with a pass, a bathhouse and a large lineup, the cost is very much worth it for a three-day, constant, country-fueled party.
